First, thank you for asking for our feed back. It is a rare thing that a justice department official would solicit comments from the public.

Microsoft's offer to supply computers for schools is yet another example of the problem. Many of us are baffled at how brazen this attempt to push other products out of the education market appears! In education we have watched this company steal other people's work (such as the whole graphical-interface concept) without as much as a slap on the wrist. Forcing us to use their Media Player by disabling others is particularly nasty, a continuation of the browser problem which started all this.

Thanks for listening.
